Cells, spores, even germs when viewed through a microscope have their own beauty every bit as much as does an orchid or a monarch butterfly or a sunset. Size and scope are indeterminate of beauty. So is it also with a human life.

A beautiful life or a beautiful person is not determined by the popularity, the public visibility, or financial success. Rather, it is the one that fulfills the role that God assigned. The smallest, most insignificant life in this world is a blessing when it lives out what God assigned him or her to do. I'll see you in church, Stephen
